AptSoft Corporation, a pioneer in complex event processing (CEP) technology, announced that a new version of its run-time server has exceeded a key performance benchmark designed to measure the ability to correlate patterns of business activity from across the extended enterprise over varying periods of time. The benchmark, dubbed "1000 by 1000" by CEP inventor David Luckham, involves checking each of 1000 "events" against 1000 other events within a business process per second.
